NONPROFITS LAUNCH NEW CAMPAIGN TO BOOST ILLINOIS CENSUS RESULTS

Illinois Foundations' Project Represents Nation's Largest Philanthropic Effort to Target Hard-to-Count Populations, Increase State's Share of Federal Funds

(Chicago, Ill.) Aiming to overcome hurdles that could depress Illinois census tallies and cost our state deserved federal funds, an unprecedented alliance of 60 nonprofits and 10 of Illinois' leading foundations are working together to improve participation in the 2010 census among hard-to-count populations. Targeting hard-to-reach communities, this endeavor, known as the Count Me In campaign, is the largest effort in the country to promote census participation in a single state by a group of philanthropic funders and nonprofit organizations.

The $1.2 million campaign will attempt to increase census participation in 37 targeted communities in Chicago and throughout Illinois. The effort will combine innovative public education campaigns, community outreach, new media, trainings, special events and other grassroots activities designed to increase the mail-back rate of census forms from select Illinois communities.

The once-a-decade survey is mandated by the U.S. Constitution. Census data guide government decisions about where to build new roads, schools and hospitals and where to locate job training centers and services for the elderly. Census data are also used for drawing congressional and state legislative districts and monitoring and enforcing civil rights laws in employment, housing, voting, lending and education.

The 2010 census is particularly critical because it will help determine the distribution of roughly $400 billion a year in federal funds to state and local governments, including more than $14 billion each year to Illinois. Researchers predict Illinois will lose $12,000 in federal funds during the next ten years for each uncounted person.

Low-income, African American, Asian, Latino, immigrant, children, and non-English speaking communities have historically been undercounted in the census. Focusing on these populations, the nonprofits—rooted and widely trusted in their communities—will tap existing networks to boost participation in the 2010 census.

"Trusted voices in the community are critical when it comes to convincing hard to count populations that the 2010 Census is important, easy and safe to participate in," said Dr. Robert M. Groves, U.S. Census Bureau director. "The Census Bureau looks forward to working alongside the Count Me In grantees to help ensure an accurate and complete count of all Illinois residents next year."

"As our state faces a severe budget crisis, funds determined by the 2010 census will be even more essential," said Ellen S. Alberding, president of the Joyce Foundation. "The groups we fund – using tactics ranging from door-knocking and celebrity text messaging to barber shop and church outreach – could persuade thousands of Illinoisans to be counted."

"This is a tremendous opportunity to leverage the strengths of the organizations we are funding to ensure that Chicago and other Illinois communities are on strong economic footing for the next decade," said Nora Moreno Cargie, Director of Global Corporate Citizenship, Boeing Company. "We're pleased to be part of this initiative, and believe it could serve as a model for nonprofit, philanthropic and business partnerships in other cities across the United States."

"A full census count is vital to the communities we serve and foundations can play a role to connect community organizations with this effort to achieve a complete count," said Terry Mazany, president and chief executive officer of The Chicago Community Trust. "We are optimistic that by targeting a select set of locations that had low participation in 2000 and linking them with an army of trusted community partners, we can boost 2010 participation rates by several percentage points."

Count Me In was introduced in April with a call for proposals to reach these hard-to-count populations. More than 75 proposals from Illinois organizations were submitted and carefully reviewed by the foundations; ultimately, 26 organizations will receive grants to fund 60 nonprofit groups to carry out the work.

Count Me In is funded by The Boeing Company, The Chicago Bar Foundation, The Chicago Community Trust, the Lloyd A. Fry Foundation, Grand Victoria Foundation, the Joyce Foundation, John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, Polk Bros. Foundation, Steans Family Foundation and Woods Fund of Chicago. In addition, LISC/Chicago is supporting five New Community Program lead agencies in this effort. The Joyce Foundation has awarded separate grants to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights Education Fund, the Illinois League of Women Voters, the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund, and Citizens Advocacy Center for census related work in Illinois.
